Languages are learned by listening first, and students need as much listening input as possible in order to develop their language ability. A structured approach which gives them skills and strategies for learning will help make their task easier. Finally, by practicing what they have learned in meaningful contexts, they will understand the new language better and remember it longer.

In this course students will learn and practice using the strategies that will increase their ability to think actively while listening. The main strategies for active listening are: predicting, guessing, focusing, asking, responding and reviewing. This course is a highly participatory, active-listening course. Students will come to class prepared to listen, speak, respond and participate in all class activities. Text is Impact Listening 1. Supplemental learning material will be provided. Students will be expected to keep a loose-leaf notebook to use for all homework and class activities. Students will be expected to listen to the self-study CD provided with the text as regular homework.

This class will be taught all in English; however, do not worry too much about your language listening level. What is most important is to participate in all activities and to make an effort to improve your English to the best of your own ability. Come, relax and enjoy the fun of language learning.
