Languages are learned by listening first, and students need as much listening input as possible in order to develop their language ability. A structured approach which gives them skills and strategies for learning will help make their task easier. Finally, by practicing what they have learned in meaningful contexts, they will understand the new language better and remember it longer.

In this course students will learn and practice using the strategies that will increase their ability to think actively while listening. This course is a highly participatory, active-listening course. Students will come to class prepared to listen, speak, respond and participate in all class activities. Supplemental learning materials will be provided. Students will be expected to keep a loose-leaf notebook to use for all homework and class activities. Students will be expected to listen to the Self-study CD provided with the text as regular homework.
